Microsoft has repeatedly shown bad faith in dealing with software companies.

I believe the only effective way to prevent it from future violations is to prevent those violations from being in its interest.

Dividing Microsoft into an operating systems company and an applications company is the only way to have this happen without onerous and unworkable review by an external entity of Microsoft's business activities.

As a Microsoft stockholder, I believe this is the best way to preserve and increase shareholder value, while having the company behave in a lawful and ethical manner.
